La Salle College Founder's Week

Excerpted from <http://www.lasalle.edu.hk>

Founder's Week is a celebration of the founder of the Lasallian Schools, St. John Baptist de La Salle, and is celebrated around the world around May 15th. St. La Salle (1651-1719) started the first Lasallian school 333 years ago in Rheims, France. St. La Salle became a priest at the famous seminary of St. Sulpice, in Paris, but soon was patron to a boy's schools, poorly run. St. La Salle took over the school, focusing on training the teachers and redesigning the curriculum. St. La Salle invented the western school system of classes, free, and open to all. St. La Salle was Beatified in 1900 and Canonized in 1950 and is the Patron Saint of All Teachers.

This year, La Salle College Founder's Week (started May 13, 2013) consisted of Opening and Closing Ceremonies, a Six Day Poverty Programme, Founders Mass, Staff Lunch, and Staff Professional Development on lasallian philosophy and spirituality.

Meeting Rev. Bro. Steve Hogan in San Francisco April 2013

Ambrose Lee '98

"You reap what you sow!"

Because of his series of universities induction visits last year, Rev. Bro. Steve Hogan was invited to a 2-day conference in Davis and Berkeley in this April.

Thanks to the coordination of George Law '66, a few of us were able to meet with Bro. Steve, on 21st April, at the San Francisco International Airport before he took his flight back to Hong Kong.

During our short, 1-hour, meeting, Bro. Steve shared his trip, his plans and his vision in widening the eye-sights of the La Salle Boys.

Moreover, we also chatted about the recent development of La Salle, her victories in various sports & musical performances. The highlight of our discussion was the previous Annual Interschool Athlete Meeting at the Wan Chai Stadium. We expressed how the overseas old boys cheered and moaned in front of the computer when we watched the live broadcasting through the school's Campus TV, while Bro. Steve shared his 3-day roller-coaster feelings when he was in the field.

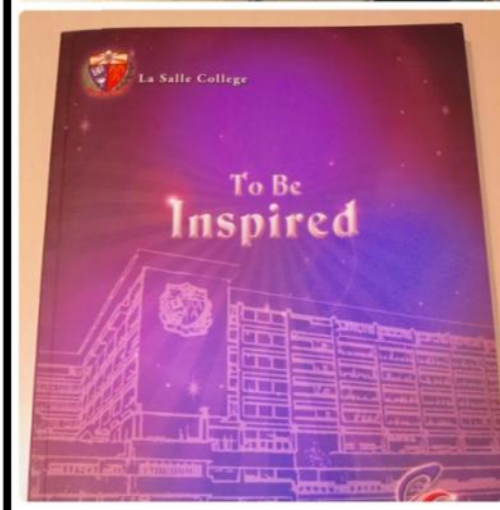

Lastly, before Bro. Steve got into the gate, he thanked and presented us the school's latest publication, "To be Inspired" and the La Salle Commemoration Flag. He also thanked all the greetings from the Bay Area LaSallians who were not able to come that day.

Thank you very much for visiting us again Bro. Steve! Wish to see you more often in the future!

Yours in La Salle,

Thank you very much for coming to our picnic! It had been an awesome event!!

On April 20th 2013, a day of perfect weather with California sunshine and serene sky, 30 LaSallians gathered at the Fremont Central Park for our chapter's picnic! We enjoyed the nicely cooked food from our chefs; we relaxed under sun, we caught up with schoolmates; we had flown the kites with the kids.... It was a splendid afternoon!

Life Update

William Lai (1961) has been a long term contributor to this newsletter, bringing many news and history from around the world to our readers. The editorial board greatly appreciates his generous support which is crucial to the newsletter in maintaining its monthly publication.

This month, William brought us to the British Isles. He and Vivien had been to the Isles many times, the latest one being around the Olympics 2012. This article appears in this newsletter as a three part series so that we can have more spaces for the photographs allowing our readers a better appreciation of the content.

The Editors

A British Isles Mini-Odyssey (part 1)

William Lai (1961)

Post-Olympics

After attending the 2012 London Olympics Games, we took the opportunity to take a cruise around the British Isles. Though we have been to England several times, we had never been to other parts of the UK and Ireland. This cruise circumnavigates the British Isles visiting the major point of interest in a very convenient way. The cruise line was Princess.

Following the Titanic, but not to its demise

Southampton

The cruise started from Southampton which has heaps of maritime history. Both the Mayflower and the Titanic began their voyages from this port. Jane Austen, of Pride and Prejudice fame, also lived in Southampton for a time.

We visited the very site where the pilgrims embarked on their boat. There's also a monument marking the historical event. It's commonly believed that the pilgrims first landed in America at the Plymouth Rock location in Massachusetts. In fact, the Mayflower first stopped over and anchored at what is now Provincetown, Cape Cod, before proceeding on to Plymouth. We had been to both locations some years ago. So for Vivien and me, we had also completed the Mayflower pilgrimage journey, though in the reverse order.

According to legend, the Mayflower pilgrims initiated the custom of Thanksgiving after a plentiful harvest, thus starting the tradition of annual traffic logjams for Americans in late November. Whether the pilgrims foresaw the chaos and frenzy of Black Friday is questionable. (For non-North American readers unfamiliar with the tradition, the American Thanksgiving is the busiest travel period, even busier than Christmas, comparable to the travel madness of the Chinese during the CNY period. Black Friday is the post-Thanksgiving bargain shopping day that has people trample over one another and stampede into retail shops for allegedly cheap goods).

Another legacy of the Mayflower sailors is less consistent with their beliefs and values. A female descendant of one of the Mayflower crew became a modern-day purveyor of the oldest profession, managing a number of high-priced escorts with high-profile clients in New York. Known as the “Mayflower Madam”, this lady is actually quite well-educated and is a fairly enterprising business person just like her ancestors who, Puritans as they were, might well be turning over in their graves for the notoriety that she engendered. Lest readers are tempted to use her services, note that her escort operation has ceased to exist after being busted.

Cruise ship leaving same dockyard as Titanic did a century ago

We visited the new Sea City Museum in Southampton which attempts to document the role of the port in Titanic's history. Perhaps because it is very new, the museum was rather disappointing in showing very few actual artifacts or relics related to the fateful ship.

The Princess cruise ship set sail from the same dockyard as that of the Titanic. Good thing we are not superstitious people. There is a monument to the Titanic on the grounds of the dockyard. But unfortunately, it was closed to the public when we visited, which makes one wonder about the point of erecting the monument at all. We were able to see the monument commemorating the engineering officers of the Titanic in a nearby park.

Guernsey

The first stop of the cruise was St Peter Port, Guernsey which is part of the Channel Islands. I remember learning about the Channel Islands in La Salle. These islands are officially not part of the UK but are personal belongings of the British Crown. There is a very long and winding history of these islands into which I will not go. But suffice it to say that my namesake, William the Conqueror, played a significant role in securing the islands for the Royal Family.

Guernsey does have a Canadian connection. General Sir Isaac Brock, after whom Brock University and the City of Brockville, both in Ontario, was named, was from St Peter Port. He was credited with leading a major force during the 1812 war against the Americans capturing Detroit, which boosted the confidence and morale of the British troops. Unfortunately, he was killed in action in the Battle of Queenston Heights. In his birthplace, Brock is commemorated by a plaque on the outside wall of the St Peter Port Town Church.

The itinerant Victor Hugo once lived in St Peter Port where he wrote Les Miserable.

Holyhead, northern Wales

Next, the cruise stopped overnight at Holyhead, or Holy Island, Wales, the third busiest passenger port in the UK with sea links to Ireland other British ports. There is much history in this area dating back to Roman times. The conquering Romans were quite afraid of the Welsh archers. The so-called "English" longbow actually originated in Wales.

Conwy Castle, Wales

Supposedly scenic view from Conwy Castle

Beaumaris Castle

But for modern sight-seeing purposes, the history in the 13th century produced more scenic venues. After winning control of Wales, King Edward I constructed a series of castles in Wales to solidify his control of the region. The most famous is Caernarfon Castle where the investiture of the Prince of Wales occurs, a tradition started by King Edward I who gave that title to his son as another gesture of control over Wales.

The most picturesque castle, however, is Conwy Castle which we visited on a land tour. Built on an outcrop in the estuary of the River Conwy, the castle is unique in its rectangular shape rather than in the form of concentric circles and it sits on prime real estate with a commanding view of the surrounding waterways and countryside. A World Heritage Site, the castle is recognised as an exemplary specimen of fine medieval military architecture. We also visited Beaumaris castle which has a contrasting concentric plan.

On the way to these castles, we passed through a town in southeast Anglesey with the longest name in Europe. That town usually is known as Llanfairwillgwyngyll. But believe or not, that is the short form of the name. Its train station bears the full name of the place, a behemoth of a name with 58 characters. Please see the accompanying photographs for an appreciation of the name.

(Editor: The full name of the town is LLANFAIRPWLLGWYNGYLLGOGERYCHWYRNDROBWLILLANTYSILILOGOGOCH)

Dublin

The closest we came to a Titanic experience was seeing the stormy Irish Sea while approaching Holyhead. We could feel the raging torrents of the waters and flashes of the Titanic saga appeared in our imaginings, but luckily no icebergs were in sight. The only setback was a delayed departure from Holyhead to Dublin.

We took a city tour of Dublin. The most significant sites seemed to be St Patrick's Cathedral and Unity College.

You try to pronounce the station name

北美風沙 The North American LaSallians

Jun 2013

Built on the very site where Ireland's patron saint once baptised converts, the Cathedral did not look very spectacular as one would expect in view of its historical significance. It does contain a statue of St Patrick and a chair allegedly used by King William III when he came to the cathedral to thank God for his victory over rival King James in 1690. Somewhat inconsistent with the theme of the Cathedral, another notable Irish character was venerated by a statute on the Cathedral's grounds, that of Sir Benjamin Lee Guinness, a descendant of the founder of the Guinness brew.

The other site we visited was the relatively well-known Trinity College, Ireland's answer to Oxford and Cambridge. Trinity College is also noted for housing the Book of Kells, the artful rendition of the four Gospels of the New Testament. There was a huge queue to enter the library to see the Book. Unfortunately, we didn't have time to partake.

Belfast

Sailing into Belfast evoked images of the "Troubles", euphemistically named for the violent and murderous conflicts in Northern Ireland. But when we toured the city, we saw nothing of the sort. It appeared peaceful enough, though there were reports of some disturbance after our visit.

These days, Belfast seems to be more interested in cashing in on the world's insatiable fascination with the Titanic tale. The Titanic was built in Belfast which now boasts to have the newest and largest Titanic museum in the world. The museum was opened in April 2012 to coincide with the centennial anniversary of the sinking of the ship in April of 1912. The museum was extremely popular and bookings needed to be made well in advance in order to gain entry to the exhibits. Unfortunately, we did not have enough time to do so. We were, however, able to wander through the grounds of the museum and the very spots where various parts of the Titanic were drafted and built.
